VI. TEACHING

Courses Taught at Texas A&M University

RPTS 316 Recreation Management of Wildlands. This course examines the systems and techniques for managing wildlands, understanding visitor use, the agencies/organizations that are involved, and the factors that can influence it.

RPTS 336 Recreation Research and Analysis. This course familiarizes the student with techniques, concepts, and issues involved in conducting and understanding research in recreation, parks, and tourism settings, e.g., research articles, scientific method, etc.

RENR 400 Study Abroad in Natural Resources (South Pacific). This course exposes students to issues of natural resource management, sustainability, ecology, and culture in one of three countries: Fiji, New Zealand and Australia.

RPTS 609 Social, Economic, and Cultural Issues in Outdoor Recreation. This graduate course examines social/cultural phenomenon and trends that impact outdoor recreation activities, participants, research, planning, and management.

RPTS 666 Parks, Tourism and the Natural Environment. This graduate course analyzes natural and cultural management on public lands in the United States.
